More and more people—even within mainstream science—are now considering that we might be living in a simulation or a coded virtual reality program of sorts. Still, this is nothing new—alternative researchers, including ourselves, have suspected this for quite a long time, and the more we research, the stronger the suspicion that this is the case.

If the above is true, wouldn't it be a piece of cake for somebody who is controlling this coded reality to insert virtually anything they want into the program, considering they possess the technology to do so? This video will expand on this to see where it will lead us.

Let's start with the so-called alien abductions. It's fairly well established by now that people who feel they have been abducted are often implanted with false memories afterwards. Often, they perceive themselves having been on a spaceship/UFO and been tampered with by aliens, such as Reptilians, Grays, or Praying Mantises. To the victim, this feels very real. However, the military has the technology to take the soul out of the body and experiment with our minds, where after they implant a false narrative into the victim so that they think they have been abducted by aliens.

If we live in a simulation that we can compare to a computer game, where we think we are our avatars, i.e. our physical bodies, wouldn't it be easy for the Overlords to insert whatever they want into this software, if they were the ones who created this simulation to begin with? If a computer programmer has created a video game that is up and running, but they want to insert something more into the game, couldn't they, for instance, insert UFOS, Reptilians, and other so-called aliens into it, and the souls, playing the game without knowing they are stuck in it, think that it's real? This would not be a difficult task for a game developer. If we look at this on a grander scale, where the Overlords are the programmer, it would work the same way. In reverse, they could also extract things from the game, as needed.

If this is true, are UFOs, aliens, and other unusual phenomena within the Matrix really real, or are they just insertions into the software to fill a purpose?

En.ki and his team created this current construct after the infamous Flood about 13,000 years ago—this is when they gave us amnesia and, at some point, put us in a time-loop, as discussed in previous videos and articles. From thereon, the genuine souls, who have invested their soul energy in the avatar, believe that the video game is all there is.

We talk a lot about the Singularity these days, but what is the Singularity in this context? Well, wouldn't it just be a transition, where all ignorant souls are transferring their soul energy from one computer game to another, when the Overlords have concluded that we have “outlived” the potentials for this current game—seen from their perspective? Now, they need to transfer our consciousness to something they call the “New Earth,” “New Construct,” or “Fifth Dimension,” which is just another computer program with other rules that they’ve prepared for us. Currently, we’re in the middle of the transition between “two worlds,” so to speak.

These virtual realities are all interactive and at the same time predestined. They have goals that we are supposed to achieve—thus, the amnesia, manipulation, and the belief systems we’ve been subjected to and adopted. A certain degree of freewill is allowed, but in this matrix it’s limited. If we go too far out on a limb, we will often be “corrected” and pushed back into the fold. Usually, we have been trained to police each other, and there are consequences for walking astray from the herd and go in our own direction.

Today’s computer games can look very close to the reality we are used to, and we’re often in awe how good the graphics are. If humans can create this and make us super-enthusiastic to play—even to the point when we get addicted—what do you think the gods, with their advanced technology, are capable of when it comes to the Matrix? It wouldn’t be much of a stretch to imagine that they can do a thousand times better.

When the Overlords created the human avatars, they didn’t create us as equals. They experimented with DNA so that certain bloodlines have abilities that others don’t, and vice versa. Thus, some people are automatically more psychic than others, for example. These people can become easy targets for manipulation, unless they have a greater understanding of how things work and can avoid the traps. This is where channeling comes into the picture.

Although there are no absolutes, we highly suspect that the majority of channelings that are not conducted by the military, are programs inserted into the channeler. As mentioned earlier, some people are more receptive than others because of their DNA/programs. If this is a simulation, wouldn’t it be easy to tune into a certain avatar’s experiences, beliefs, and imagination and create an interactive program that can be inserted into that person? After all, they are capable of creating empty human vessels that can interact with us here in the Matrix. These channeled entities/programs might be indistinguishable from an alien being, or whomever/whatever they claim to be. These programs can potentially run more or less automatically, just like very advanced A.I.—which these programs would actually be.

This could be the reason why certain people receive these messages at a particular time. Imagine that the Overlords have a long-term plan for humankind, and at a certain point, it's time for a particular program to be run to steer humans in a certain direction. We might have a difficult time accepting that such advanced, interactive programs exist, but we need to think again! Just because humanity is not capable of creating such advanced programs, what makes us think that there couldn't be others who are capable of doing it? Is that such a big stretch?

All these A.I. programs need to do is to scan the channeler and the Akashic Records to find the answer and then give a response according to how the A.I. program is constructed, but being restricted to the purpose a certain program in question has—the Overlords would not like the program to reveal more than it's supposed to. For instance, these programs can say they are of the Galactic Federation, Pleiadians, us in the future, Jesus, God, the Arcturians, or whatever fits the bill.

Again, if we take all of the above into consideration, another question might come up; is the Greater Universe, i.e. the KHAA, also a simulation and a computer program, metaphorically speaking? Is the Universe a simulation, within a simulation, within a simulation? Well, it could be, but as we see it, it might be from a much grander perspective than the simulation we currently live in. Keep in mind that this matrix was created by En.ki and his crew of scientists, and it's just a bad copy and a mimic of the Greater Universe. In this construct, we—the “players”—got trapped because the gods made us forget that we were “playing a game.” Now, most people think that this game is all that is, including the 4% Universe we can perceive within this limited containment.

It's not that we're not living in the KHAA already, though. If the living room, in which we play a video game, is the KHAA, don't the computer and the computer game also exist in the living room/the KHAA? This is what we mean when we say that the KHAA is all around us, even when we operate within the Matrix.

The KHAA, even if it's metaphorically a virtual reality game, too, is created as a blueprint for souls to expand, learn, create, and experience in, in order for the Divine to learn about Herself. Bringing this down to a much lower level, it's like when a scientist creates an environment in a lab, where they can experiment to learn and expand their knowledge. The scientist in this analogy would be the Divine and the lab would be the KHAA—no other connection to scientists other than the analogy, of course.

You might say, "I don't want to live in a computer program when I go to the KHAA." Remember it's a metaphor—it's not perfect, but it works. For the Divine to be able to explore Her potentials, She needed to separate Herself into smaller units (souls), and these souls needed a blueprint from which they could create and operate. The Queen, as a soul extension of Spirit (the Divine Feminine), set Herself out to do just that.

So, from a soul perspective, do we want to operate in a universe that is a bad copy and a mimic of the original one--a copy where we have very limited freewill and we almost always learn only from pain and suffering, having amnesia, and being stuck in a seemingly endless time-loop, or do we want to create with full awareness, without being controlled by some authoritarian entity, who place himself above us as a god?

Some claim we can bypass it all and go back to Source. No one can say for sure whether this is possible or not (we had a long discussion about this on our forum), but to us, we don't think that's an option. There is always a chance that the Greater Universe will one day fulfill its purpose and implode and go back to Source as a huge body of experience, but what then? Will everything just stop in a big contentment? No more movement and no more learning? Is it possible for the Divine Feminine to learn everything there is to learn, when an almost infinite number of souls in the universe can make personal decisions that are unique to them? Doesn't that make an almost infinite number of potentials to explore?

Video 206: Are Channeled Entities, UFOs, and Aliens just Programs?

Beyond the physical universe, which consists of matter, energy, space, and time, there is no matter, energy, space, and time—only a static. No movement. This means there is no time, so to the Divine (pure Spirit), time is irrelevant. This makes us think that creation might continue "forever" from our point of view. However, time is not linear in the KHAA when we operate as nonphysical beings, so our experiences in the KHAA will be completely different from here.

We have used metaphors and analogies in this video. We can't directly compare the Matrix and the KHAA to computer programs because things are so much more advanced and complicated than that, but the metaphors and analogies work fairly well to get across a concept for the listener or reader to consider. Does this, in any way, fit into your own picture?

We are still working on the next episode of the miniseries, and we hope we will be ready with it so we can insert it at the end of our next video. Thanks for your patience!
