It seems like we almost have a theme this time. Many people are asking questions on the same subject—reincarnation and the time loop, in which we are hypothetically reliving the same life over and over. Please send more questions to wespenreproductions@gmail.com.

QUESTION 1: If we are doing the same life over and over, is it possible to make gigantic changes or are we stuck to pretty much the same script? For instance, am I always married to the same woman or could I marry someone else one time, which would completely change my life, including the children I have?

ANSWER: The hypothesis that we live the same lifetime over and over, we call a “wheel.” The purpose for those who want to move on from this reality is to break this wheel, as being discussed elsewhere in videos and articles on our blog.

There are many wheels, aka time-loops on grander or lesser scales. The equinox is another, the long ages yet another. When we repeat the same life, we start over, but the changes we made in the previous life are now transferred into the new life, so not two lifetimes will be exactly the same. Let’s say that in this lifetime you make another decision than you did in your previous life. Let’s pretend you are in love with two girls at the same time, and you decide to marry one of them called Mary. However, in previous life you chose the other girl—Jane. This is a major change, and you will now break the old cycle in that regard, and your children will not be the same and will not look the same. Your life will be different from the moment you choose Mary, compared to your previous life where you chose Jane. We also make small decisions and changes every day and all the time. Depending on what decisions you make, it will determine how similar your current lifetime will be compared to previous ones. So, nothing is static—there are always bigger and smaller changes.

If there is an important lesson for you that is attached to your wife, you will likely incarnate and marry her over and over. If not, she may incarnate with you in a different role, like a friend. However, we can’t consciously decide we don’t want the lesson. It doesn’t work that way, from what I understand. The only way to clear them, from my experience, is to recognize them in this lifetime as cycles and patterns within ourselves and make the changes HERE. I think that is how the gigantic changes are made. If you closed the cycle with your current wife, then it is highly likely the next incarnation will be with a new wife or maybe the cycle was about marriage as a whole and there will be no wife in the next turn. I don’t know. These are really important questions that people would benefit from greatly to come to their own conclusions about how it relates to their own life. These are the questions that lead you in the direction of discovering those cycles and lessons. That has been my experience and the only answer I can give with confidence. Anything else is just speculation because no one really knows.

QUESTION 2: So basically, we, right now, can look BACK on our lives as memories. RIGHT NOW, RIGHT HERE, our future selves may be looking at us right now through their memory. Also, we can look back on memories and be regretful about a decision we made. When we get a gut feeling something isn't right or is right, can it be our future selves reflecting back and telling us to either go for it or not? Can some of our intuition be our future selves? Couldn't this also explain future prediction tools like tarot?

ANSWER: It definitely looks like all time is simultaneous, as you suggest here. This means that present, past, and future are happening at the same time. Time is also fluid, which means that every time you have a problem, you have different potentials how to solve it. You may consider a few of them and choose one. However, because you considered the other ones, you also put energy onto these alternative timelines, which now also will exist, although left "hanging." On top of that, you make different decisions in different lifetimes (see the answer to Question 1), so there are different versions of the pasts and different futures for each individual. Moreover, it has also been suggested—particularly from channeled and remote-viewed material—that we live parallel lives, i.e. a part of you live in 2020, and perhaps another part lives in the 1700's, while another lives a life around 300 BC, and so on. And to add even more; we also have the physical ancestral bloodline, which also carries memories but has nothing to do with you on a soul level—it's just your physical DNA.

So, it becomes quite complicated. However, with all the above in mind, we can't exclude that some intuition might come from a "future" self, so to speak.

QUESTION 3: Did the AIF or Enki invent the Ouija board? Does it go all the way back to when the AIF invaded Gaia, and what makes the Ouija board attract non physicals, has it been enchanted or has a spell been put on it by the [Alien Invader Force] AIF?

Some say it is a dangerous thing to mess or play with or use. Others say it's perfectly safe, and that it depends on the state of mind or being of the individual.

Esther Hicks and Jane Roberts, for instance, both say it is safe and that is how they came in contact with the entities they channeled. What's your opinion?

ANSWER: To the AIF or Enki questions, the answer is NO.

The Ouija Board, as it is named is a creation of the toy company, Hasbro, and was sold as a parlor style (or group) board game. The concept comes from something older called a spirit board and possibly originated with three sisters during the nineteenth century, who promoted themselves as mediums to attract patrons with their new ‘talking board’. This type of tool is very similar to automatic writing and it’s not more or less dangerous than your own mind because that is where the messages are coming from, ultimately. It’s not a gateway or portal to anywhere other than your own hidden thoughts or forgotten memories. If you’ve created demons for yourself, then you may call them up, but they aren’t the product of any malevolent alien faction or demonic spirits. So, I agree with whoever said it depends on the state of mind of the user.

So, the Ouija board, as well as the tarot cards, etc., are tools for us humans to get in touch with a higher aspect of ourselves. We don’t need any of these tools to be able to do that, but because most humans have forgotten how to get in touch with higher aspects of their own minds, tools like these can become useful. The Cassiopaeon material is retrieved by using a Ouija board, for example, and the “entity” clearly states that he or she is the board user in the future—not an alien or something else. IOW, it’s the Higher Mind. Is it dangerous? I wouldn’t say it is, but like with everything else, it’s very clever to use discernment. The “channel” between the 3D mind and the Higher Mind in these cases can to various degree be distorted.

QUESTION 4: Assuming we are on the cusp of the Singularity, every life I had previous would be in this same spot, would it not? I.e., I have always lived on the cusp of the Singularity. So, we must not ever go into the Singularity since I am reliving this life over and over. If I die and get reincarnated again, I will be back as a child in the 1970s, where regular people did not have computers and we could not even fathom such a thing as the Singularity. Would I not always just go back and never be trapped in the Singularity? It seems like a paradox; how can we be at risk in this lifetime and never in all the other exact same lifetimes?

ANSWER: This is a good question. From what has been leaked and researched about the Singularity so far, the EL-ite are constantly collecting data on us every time we are online—particularly when we use social media. They make “copies” of our personalities and gather them in an A.I. Cloud, so there is hardly anybody on this planet who does not have their personality copied into the Cloud already. We are, IMO, in the beginning of the Singularity already, but we don’t know for certain every step and every plan they have lined out for us. There is one official version, of course, then there is a slightly different version, obtained by alternative researchers, and then there is the ultimate version that is hidden from everybody, except for a few at the top.

The way I see it, the Singularity is an insertion into the timelines. We've talked about horizontal and vertical time in our videos. If the time we are experiencing is linear, then there are vertical timelines, as well, where things can be inserted anywhere on the horizontal timeline. However, even that is a metaphor of sorts. Time, as we know it, is an illusion, and lifetimes, parallel lives, and simultaneous lives are illusions, as well. It's just soul energy experiencing different events across a perceived timeline where the soul splinters' focus goes, but ultimately, it's the same soul energy. From a non-physical perspective, it is not difficult to collect all that and put it in the Cloud, regardless of the soul's experience; whether it's in present life or in the 1700's. The only reason it's not been done "before" is that our consent is needed.

We are not worried about the Singularity, however. We still have freewill, and so long as we don't give our minds away by giving our consent, we will not be trapped, although a copy of us might remain here. But look around you; how many people do not embrace the Singularity and think it's cool? The majority of humanity seems to embrace and be excited about all this "advanced technology."

Consider that the Singularity is a concept. Right now, it is an idea that exists in your mind. It isn't a real event. Now, consider that this concept was meant to be introduced into your life at a particular time when you were ready for the emotions, thoughts, and actions it would generate within you. Have you encountered this process in other lifetimes? Yes, it's likely, since you are encountering it again. History repeats and so does the progression of technology. There is a "you" which is unaware of this Singularity concept, as you wisely point out. There is a "you" which is aware of it. There is a "you" which is anticipating it with fear or excitement. There is a "you" who has resolved and overcome this fear in whatever way you will and is on the other side of this idea, so to speak. You will experience ALL of them in this lifetime, but they are all different perspectives of the same "you". You will keep repeating this process of being unaware and becoming aware until you have finished gaining all there is to gain for YOU from this experience. The paradox exists because you have the ability to project your perspective into different dimensions to observe yourself at different levels of awareness. That's really awesome when you think about it! The paradox is a "you"

which is unaware, existing at the same time as a “you” which is aware. Do you see how being multidimensional works, now?

The progression of technology consists of more than just the invention of a computer. A long chain of important changes in attitude, inventions, and motivations set us on this path. There are some people who will always promote the fear of technology and there will be those who are excited by the progression of it. This has always been the case throughout history. Some fear the unknown and some are excited by it. Years ago, some people warned of the dangers of the invention of the automobile over horsepower or manpower. There are still small communities who shun such a thing as cars while others use them with not a care in the world.

The correct attitude to have with such things is the one which benefits you the most and helps you discover who you are. If you are afraid of the advancement of technology and think it is evil, then you are projecting evil onto something inanimate and therefore it cannot inherently be evil because it doesn't have a will or intention. So, it's the people then, isn't it? What are we doing when we project evil intentions onto others, whether we think they are human or not? I'll let you discover the answer to that for yourself. It's a big one.
