Happy New Year, and welcome to the first Q&A Session in 2021! It will be a little longer than usual. Thank you for your questions, and we hope people who watch this video will send us more questions for future Q&As. Feel free to submit them at wespenreproductions@gmail.com, and don't forget to put "Q&A" in the subject line of your email, or we might miss it. Now, let's dig into today's session:

QUESTION 1: What is the purpose behind the three major religions? Is it to have people in groups and help fulfill prophecy, which originated from the Overlords i.e., true ET's?

They all require worship, and all have a "savior" which is expected to return but, in a nutshell, is it just another "ascension" theme into En.ki's program?

ANSWER: Since as long as we have had amnesia, humanity as a soul group has been on a spiritual quest, asking themselves the questions, who am I? Why am I here? Where am I going? This is something that can easily be taken advantage of. Whom we call Yaldabaoth/En.ki, and his Archons, for example, have given us and/or manipulated the different religions, and we have been told to worship (something that was foreign to us in the beginning). We have been taught to worship a being/God that has nothing to do with creating us, but who can easily control us by manipulating us and our spiritual quest for truth. Thus, our prayer, worship, and sacrifices go to this God (or Gods in some religions). He/they collect all this soul energy we give them. Then, this becomes a human endeavor, where high priests or similar make sure that these systems and hierarchies are kept in place.

The following does not come from us, it comes from a remote viewing group we respect (CryptoViewing). The partial answer to this is that it is mostly due to the Age we have been in, which was Pisces. Pisces was the age of law, order, and organized systems of rule such as governments and religions.

As humanity began her transition out of tribal life and began to organize into communities, those communities formed according to like-minded belief structures and rules. The dominance hierarchy began to develop into a more spiritual and intellectual alignment rather than brute strength always being in the role of leadership. Priest classes began to develop and with that, appointed leaders. Many governmental heads of state had a religious advisor whispering in their ear and guiding their decisions and policies. Many governments have religion as their foundation, the United States being just one example of that. Most laws are based on religious orders.

Prophecy (and religion as a whole) is a very good way to keep large groups of people toeing the line of order and keeping the mass consciousness projecting into an unknown (and mostly fear-based) event which brings with it a type of reward or punishment for toeing that line or stepping out of it. If someone wants to keep you in line, obeying the law, and living in an ordered and peaceful society, then they need to give you rules to live by. If they give you rules to live by, there needs to be potential consequences if you break those rules, because those "rules" can be very arbitrary if they are only seen as coming from some nonphysical, ambiguous, and veiled “god”. People need to literally fear the “wrath of god” so that they don’t step out of line, and contrary to that, they need to want the reward (heaven) enough to follow the rules, even if it means they must go against their stronger and more fundamental survival instincts. Religion is one way that society maintains obedience.

NOW...having said that, whether or not some cosmic interloper interrupted, influenced, and took advantage of this development by projecting “god” into our conscious awareness, or whether humanity arrived at the concept of “god” as a stage of development of primitive psychological development (see bicameral mind theory), who’s to say? That will have to be something each person discerns for themselves. The potential for both possibilities to be true exists.

QUESTION 2: Do you believe there is an objectively high-vibrational action and an objectively low-vibrational action? Or are actions deemed "high-vibrational" or not depending on how we feel because of making that action? Could a murderer, theoretically, live a high-vibrational life if killing energizes him? Could a narcissist live a whole and fulfilling life? Or are they bound to a low-vibrational one due to their nature?

ANSWER: Yes, I believe in objective vibrational frequency. I believe that those things which support and encourage “life” are of a high vibration. That does not always mean they feel good at the time or that you will get what you want, because sometimes the higher vibrational solution is not a match to your own vibration at the time. You may actually be at a rather low vibrational state and if that’s the case, the beneficial solution won’t feel very good at all. You may be in desperate love with another person and asking the Universe to guide your life with the best intention and highest vibration for your benefit when you suddenly or eventually find yourself ending that relationship. What we see or perceive in the outer-most layer of creation (this physical realm) is not always the fullest perception of an event, a person, or an action. If you ask and intend for only those things which are of the highest vibration of yourself and MEAN IT without any emotional attachment to a specific outcome, the results may be vastly different than what you think they will be.

On the other side of the coin, whatever can be discouraging or unsupportive of life would be at the other end of the vibrational frequency. Yes, bad people can live fulfilling and satisfying lives but that is not because what they do is at the highest vibration, it is because their soul is attuned or “tuned” to a much lower frequency and that is what resonates and feels good to them. Something like that would not feel good to a person whose soul vibration is adjusted at a higher frequency, so they would avoid that kind of behavior at all costs.

What determines how you feel is determined by where your vibration is falling on the frequency scale, and it is in constant adjustment. It is also being greatly misinterpreted due to our own fear. Something that is incredibly good for us can feel very, very “bad” because we are afraid of it, but it may be for our highest good. In that case, that is not a true vibrational interpretation. Does that make sense? It is up to us to figure out what is fear and what is not. Everything here must pass through this fear-filter. That is just the operating system of this creation we live in. It’s the tool we are supposed to use (among others).

Contrary to earlier articles, when it comes to narcissism, nothing is all black or all white. Many things that are perceived to be bad are used to achieve the highest vibration and vice versa. The human experience has the fullest range of emotional and vibrational spectrum available and to deny ourselves ANY part of this spectrum is deny a full human experience. Nothing is always positive or always negative. There is no positive or negative emotions or experiences since all of it can be beneficial depending on perspective. Toxic positivity exists as well as beneficial negativity. Keep an open mind and look for ways to grow from each experience rather than worrying about placing everything in an either/or category. How we use our time here is what determines whether something is/was supportive or not.

Murdering someone is a low-vibrational thing because by cutting the other person’s life short, you interfere with that person’s spiritual development and delay his or her process, and that person needs to start again in a new incarnation, and with amnesia, when they could have gained more knowledge and wisdom if they would have been allowed to live. There are exceptions, IMO, if your own life or those around you are threatened by a murderer. In these cases, if there are no other ways to stop the killer, it’s a better choice to kill the killer than letting them kill you or several other innocent people around. But it’s never a high-vibrational act. Also, if a pathological narcissist gets a high from being mean to others, the narcissist may get a spike in adrenaline, or they might get an emotional rush, but through their behavior, they are not of a high frequency so long as they feel a need to feed on and control others to survive.

QUESTION 3: If the Singularity takes effect, and a human consciousness is duplicated in digital form, what does it mean for the digital "soul?" Is a digital "soul" really a soul, considering that it was created in the 3rd dimension? What are some reasons for why I should be concerned if the AIF (the Alien Invader Force) has a digital copy of my soul?

ANSWER: To the best of my understanding, the soul is part of the vehicle we use to experience creation, whatever that creation may be. There is an area of creation which we experience now that is not a physical realm but rather a technological realm. I don't know what else to call it, to be honest. We need an avatar to participate in that realm and that avatar could be considered "soul-like". Your consciousness is being copied into that avatar the more you participate with it, emotionally invest in it, and put your own energy/focus into it. There may be other technological realms in which you can take this constructed avatar and participate. We don't know. This internet may connect to other Universal "internets", if the rumors are true, and just like you take your soul with you to travel the Universe, you might take this avatar to explore more expanded realms in that way. It seems that we nurture, develop, and cultivate our avatar for internet experiences to much of the same extent that we would grow, develop, and take care of our physical soul. Some even prefer to work on the digital avatar more than the physical avatar. One interesting thing that I have observed with myself is that the more I grow and nurture my physical avatar, the less developed my INTERNET avatar becomes. In fact, it stops being interested in that realm and stops developing on that path. It might even disappear altogether, who knows?

The concerns about someone or something having a copy of your avatar are the same for the technological realm as they are for the physical realm – identity theft and manipulation. Your soul is your identity in this Universe. Your "digital" avatar is your identity on the internet (which may also be and is rumored to be Universal, as well). What you do to protect yourself is up to you. Which one you dedicate your energy and focus to is up to you.

QUESTION 4: Who or what is Abraxas? Curious to know your thoughts on this word, gnostic term, or Greek term?

ANSWER: It is a word that means Chief Archon. Who or what that is, is up to your own interpretation.

QUESTION 5: When we die and go out through the Grid, we don't interact with anyone, but while we are here on earth, are there genuine beings who want to help because that's what they wanted to do with their reincarnation?

Also, I've heard that there are hundreds of beings who have no specific person to help and that we can call on them because they genuinely have our best interests at heart?

I know some guides aren't for us, but do you think some are, or is this another trick?

ANSWER: Yes, there are those whose choice has been to help humanity, either on an individual basis or a collective basis, from what I understand. As for there being hundreds of beings with no specific person to help, I can't say. I've never heard or read that. I'm not saying it isn't true, it's just that I don't have an answer for it.

Based on our own research, these are the options we have when we die (but there might be more options that we are not aware of, of course). When people die, most of them get recycled back here until they have "learned their lessons," based on the values of those who oversee the afterlife process in the Matrix/Kenoma. Those who are more advanced can become spirit guides and help relatives, friends, and sometimes unknown people, still living on Earth. Seth, channeled by Jane Roberts, is one such person. He was once in the recycling loop, just like we are, but he advanced to become a spirit guide, and eventually, he became a teacher, channeling through Jane Roberts. You advance in Yaldabaoth's/En.ki's System, but it takes a long, long time. According to the Gnostic texts, it looks like we are advancing through the Seven Heavens. We once "fell" from the upper heavens and down, and now we are supposed to climb back up the same way we climbed down. The holes in the Grid, I was told, will bypass this almost endless process. If we go Yaldabaoth's route, there are no guarantees "he" will let us go, even if we reach the Seventh Heaven. By then, we might also have been so integrated into his System that we think we've reached the highest level when we haven't, so to speak. But I don't see Orion, aka the Eight and Ninth Heaven, as locations "out there," necessarily, but rather a state of mind that manifests externally, just like our physical life does right now. So, if we want to achieve what we can potentially achieve in "Orion," we first need to have reached the state of mind where we are ready for it, as discussed elsewhere. We need to be determined and decisive as of what to do and then go for it with full intention.

Are there beings on our planet right now, helping us out? I've learned there are some beings from outside our realm of reality who are here to indirectly assist us, and some might be here as scouts, checking out our situation.

I, Ariel, have never had any interactions with anything or anyone I could confidently call a "helper" or a guide of any kind. I have called on this kind of help many, many times in my life when facing extremely hard situations with absolutely no results even though I believed in it (guardian angels) with all my heart. I do know that there are those who have called on help and received it. I know someone, personally, who received such support.

When it comes to guides, help, whether asking or receiving, I think this must be a very personal and individual decision. I would not advise anyone for it or against it. When it comes to being helped according to one's best interest, I think we can reference vibration with this, as well. The "help" you get will be in alignment with the vibration of your intention.

That is just my own thoughts on it, and I have no proof. In my life, there has only ever been just me trying to figure things out with no discernable guidance or help. Since you have introduced the possibility to be "tricked" into your own personal beliefs about such things, then you have created the potential to be deceived. How you want or need to process that will be up to you.
